Fire Insurance Case Settled

Suit to recover $3,000 for property damage caused by fire, filed in the circuit court last month by Adam J. Heisner of Frankfort, against the Green Garden Farmers' Insurance Co., has been settled out of court for $1,750.

Announcement has been made by A. H. Krusemark, attorney for Heisner, that the suit has been dismissed. According to Mr. Krusemark the Insurance Company had offered to settle the claim for $1,200 before the case was filed.

Mr. Heisner had a dwelling house insured for $2,500 which was destroyed by fire last March. The house was unoccupied at the time of the fire and had been unoccupied for 60 days prior.

"In case any house be vacant or unoccupied to exceed 30 days the company shall be liable for not more than one-half of any loss or damage," reads one clause in the policy.

The insurance company interpreted that as meaning one-half of the insured value but Heisner contended that the language of the policy was plain enough and could not be construed in any other way. He claimed the value of the property was $6,000 and that under the policy he should be entitled to recover $3,000.

Former Tinley Boy Killed By Fall From Tree

Wm. C. Koehler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Koehler of Tinley Park met with a tragic death at his home in Blue Island when he sustained a fractured skull in a fall from a tree.

Mr. Koehler was with the American Expeditionary forces in the World War and saw very active service in France and was gassed. In one fierce engagement only he and one other companion out of a whole company escaped alive and uninjured. The effects of being gassed impaired his health and he was in the doctor's care more or less after his return but of late appeared to be improving.

His father, Wm. F. Koehler recently gave him money with which to purchase his own home in Blue Island. The new home was a great source of pleasure and delight.

A big oak tree stood in the yard in front of the house. Carpenters told Mr. Koehler that the tree was old and unsafe and that in case of a heavy wind it might be blown down on the house and advised it would be safer to cut the tree down which he agreed to do.

Sunday morning he had spare time and two other men came to help him cut the tree down. It was decided best to tie a rope on the top of the tree to guide its fall. Mr. Koehler climbed up the tree and as he reached out to catch the rope that was thrown up to him, the limb he was standing on broke. He hung on and slid part way down the tree trunk when he struck a projection on the tree, the force breaking his hold and he fell backwards a distance of about eight striking on his head on the frozen ground resulting in a fractured skull. He was unconscious when he was picked up. He was rushed to the St. Francis hospital in Blue Island where he died about six o'clock Sunday evening without regaining consciousness.

The body was brought to the home of his parents in Tinley Park Tuesday. The funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon from the Koehler home to the Zion Lutheran church, Rev. A. Buddenhagen officiating.

Wm. C. Koehler son of Wm. F. and Mary Koehler was born Sept. 4, 1895 in town Bremen. He was confirmed in 1910. Following service overseas he was united in marriage June 2, 1921 with Miss Lolita Dutro of Chicago following which he resided in Blue Island. To this union one daughter Louise was born, who with the deeply bereaved wife and mother, his parents, three brothers, Walter, Peter, Charles, one sister, Mrs. Annie Mancke and a host of other relatives and friends mourn his tragic death. The hearts of the community go out in sympathy to the bereaved family. Mr. Koehler attained the age of 30 years, 2 months and 25 days.

Higher Education
by Rev. Otto C. Frey

Last Summer I met a young man who anticipated following the profession of teaching, in my judgment one of the noblest callings on earth, besides preaching. For to read the long list of noble names that have adorned the profession, to contemplate the struggles they have undergone, the sacrifices they have made, the characters that they have molded, the influences that they have set in motion, all this indeed is an inspiration and a benediction.

But back to my story. The young man expected to be a teacher for several years, if not for life. He was all aglow with enthusiasm. I asked him of his plans. His intensity gave the impression that possibly he was in an abnormal condition of expectancy. But no he was perfectly normal in fact all normal. He had just finished the high school or district school, I don't remember which, and now he was going to invest the savings of several summers in a few months normal course, get his "dip" and then settle down in his profession. A profession, forsooth, a profession without a possession, a scent without the substance, a sound without the sense. Let me venture a prophecy, one too that is based on history.

This young man after his exit and entrance will do very well for two, three or maybe five years. It is not every district or village school that can command the services of a normal graduate. But ten to one in ten years he will hold positions far below what he ought to have proportionately to the status of his start. He has found his level and question is, whether he sinks or swims.

The bride wore a frock of white silk crepe and a long veil of tulle caught up by a beautiful head piece, and carried a shower bouquet of roses and lily of the valleys.

The maid of honor, Miss Christine Smilde was gowned in peach colored crepe and carried pale pink roses, the bridesmaid, Miss Johanna Smilde was gowned in pale green crepe and carried deep pink roses.

Mr. Arthur Kraai acted as best man and John Smilde and Jacob Polstra as ushers.

The Rev. J. Van Beek, pastor of the church performed the ceremony, which was in the Holland language following which a reception and supper was held in the Oak Lawn community house. The hall was very pretty in orange and light and dark brown crepe paper decorating. About 125 guests were present and many and beautiful gifts were received. Mr. and Mrs. Weert have gone to housekeeping in a prettily furnished apartment at 70 1/2 Ave., and Bishop.

They were charivared by the usual pan slammers and noise.

Bowman Co., Offers
25c Bonus for T.
B. Tested Milk

The fight between the Milk Producers and Herman Bundesen, Health Commissioner of Chicago regarding the tuberculin testing of cattle promises to be a hot one and a long drawn out battle from present indications.

At a meeting in the Hotel Sherman in Chicago on Tuesday, Chicago doctors declared that Chicago was being made the dumping ground for milk from tubercular infected cattle greatly to the injury of public health.

This statement was assailed as untrue by W. J. Kittle, director of the Milk Producers Association. He has branded cattle tests as "a fad."

The fact that the Bowman Dairy Company has offered a premium of 25 cents on each 100 pounds of milk tested in accordance with the stringent demands made by the gathering of doctors Tuesday, is admission of the inefficiency of the test laws in other states, Mr. Kittle has pointed out.

The farmers all over the Chicago Dairy district are raising money for a defense fund with which to carry on the fight.

In order for farmers in the Chicago district effectually to abide by the demands of the tuberculin tests between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000 would have to be invested and even then there is no assurance of the success of such tests, Mr. Kittle said.

Farmers of Frankfort township held a mass meeting in the parlors of the St. John Evan. church in Mokena Wednesday night to further discuss plans for joining in the fight. Each member has been assessed $10 which is to go in the general defense fund. The Mokena plant of the Bowman Dairy Company is offering the 25 per cent bonus for milk from tested cows.

Mokena Parents Invited to See How School Is Run

On next Thursday, Dec. 10, will occur the regular monthly meeting of the Mokena Parent Teacher Association. In order that we may be assured of a good attendance and also to stimulate the interest which is necessary in all live organizations, a new idea is being developed and will be put into effect for that day.

The plan in detail is as follows: In order that parents and teachers may become better acquainted, better versed in the ways of each other, both in work and play, the schools, in conjunction with the Parent-Teachers Association are giving a demonstration day. The object of this day is, that the Parents may see what we do with their children during the time that they are entrusted to our care. While not many of the Parents are familiar with the exact routine of the school day, we desire that all of them pay us a visit even though it be a short one. In order that we may give the Parents the time which is most fitted to their own spare time, school will start at 3 in the afternoon, run till 5:30 at which time the children will be dismissed for one hour as is usual at the noon or lunch hour. School will reconvene again at 6:30 P. M. and will be in session until 9:00 o'clock. After school has been dismissed the regular monthly meeting of the Parents Teacher Association will be called to transact some business most important of which is the change in the regular meeting night.

This idea of giving the parents a chance to see the teachers at work is not by any means a new one. It is age old, but in order to impress upon the parents the importance of their co-operation in our work we have decided upon these somewhat unusual hours. If the parents cannot come in the afternoon, come at night. If they can not come at night, come in the afternoon. The teachers would like them here at both times. Let us all reserve this date and come and boost for a better and bigger school through the medium of the Parent Teacher Association. Remember the hours, 3:00 to 5:30 P. M. and 6:30 to 9:00 P. M.

Every class in school will be run on its usual program of studies.

Wm. N. Lathrop.

Lesson for December 6

PAUL'S VOYAGE AND SHIPWRECK

LESSON TEXT—Acts 27:1-44.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid."—Matt. 14:27.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul in a Storm at Sea.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of a Shipwreck.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Paul's Leadership.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Overcoming Adverse Circumstances.

1. The Voyage (vv. 1-20).
 2. The Ship (vv. 1-6).
- It was a vessel of Alexandria sailing from Myra to Italy.
- Two of Paul's friends, Aristarchus and Luke were permitted to go with him. Besides these three there were two hundred and seventy-three in the ship (v. 37).
3. The Storm (vv. 7-20).

The ship made little headway on account of unfavorable winds. Paul advised that they winter in Fair Havens (vv. 9-12), but his advice was unheeded. The gentle south wind deceived them so they loosed from Crete only to be overtaken by the tempestuous wind called Euroclydon. They did everything possible to save the ship; they took up the boat which was towed behind; they bound great cables around the ship to strengthen it for the storm; they lightened the ship by bringing down from the masts and rigging everything that was superfluous, and finally the cargo and tackling were thrown overboard. All this seemed to be of no avail and all hope of being saved was removed. It seemed that wicked men and material forces were combined to prevent the great apostle from reaching Rome. However, these very experiences were overruled by God to bring good cheer and salvation to many on the way. We should remember that tempestuous winds as well as soft breezes await God's faithful ones. The presence of storm does not prove that we are going the wrong way.

11. Paul's Serene Faith (vv. 21-26).

To a man who does not know God, upon the failure of the sun and stars to shine for many days, the fading of all hope is natural; but to the man of faith, hope still burns brightly. God is just as near to His own in the midst of a stormy sea as in their quiet homes. Observe Paul's behavior:

1. His Rebuke for Their Failure to Heed His Advice at Fair Havens (v. 21). This was not a mere taunt, but a reference to the wisdom of his former advice, urging them to give him a more respectful hearing.
2. Bids Them Be of Good Cheer (v. 22).

He inspired them with hope.

3. He Promises Them Safety (v. 22).

Though the ship goes to pieces, every man's life should be saved.

4. The Source of His Information (vv. 23-24).

The angel of God had revealed it unto him.

5. The Reason of Paul's Calm Faith (v. 23).

"Whose I am, and whom I serve." God can and will take care of His property (John 10:28-29). Those who have been redeemed by the blood of Jesus are not their own, but God's.

III. The Ship's Crew All Safe on Land (vv. 27-44).

This was exactly as the Lord had said. We can rest assured that all God has spoken will come to pass even though there be a broken ship, brutal soldiers and a perfidious crew. Aside from the fulfillment of God's promises, the most important part of this section is the splendid sanity which characterized Paul's action on the way. Three things marked his sanctified common sense.

1. His Vigilance Detected that the Sailors Had Planned to Escape (v. 30).

He knew how much they would be needed presently, and at once took steps to prevent their escape. He went straight to the man in charge and said, "Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved." Why should he make such a declaration when God had said that all should be saved? It was because he was not one of those foolish men who ignore human agency. He practiced the truth that genuine reliance upon God is the all-powerful incentive to human action.

2. He Got Them to Take a Substantial Breakfast (v. 34).

It was no time to talk to these men about their souls when their bodies needed immediate attention.

3. He Gave Thanks to God (v. 35).

This he did in the presence of them all. His prayer for that meal had more effect upon the people than his preaching would have had.

The Men Who Succeed

The men who succeed best in public life are those who take the risk of standing by their own convictions.—Garfield.

- 61—An Egyptian sun god

The solution will appear in next issue.

Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

NURSERY RHYME PUZZLE

I'VE seen you where you never were—
I know you don't believe me,
But peep into your looking glass—
Now—did my eyes deceive me?

Find two other mirror gazers. Right side down, on dress. Upper side down, along hair.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

THE MOTHER'S TEN COMMANDMENTS

OUR best crop is our baby crop. This is naturally so, for corn or wheat, cattle or hogs, cotton or hay are only of value as they supply the needs and desires of human beings. Whatever mistakes the present generation or its predecessors may have made, we all want the coming generation to avoid them and to have better, happier and healthier lives.

So whether we believe that the world is getting worse or getting better, every real man and woman is interested in babies. One of the most striking differences between savage and civilized life is the increased care which a civilized community gives to the two helpless extremes of life, the babies and the aged.

This increased interest in babies is found not only in individuals but in governments as well. It is only a little over fifty years ago since Massachusetts created the first state department of health to look after the health of its people. It is less than twenty-five years since the first state department of health established a department of child welfare to care for and protect the health of its babies. Today every state and most of our big cities have special departments for babies and the standing of a city is now very largely judged by the amount of time and money spent in protecting its babies from disease.

The health department in Chicago, our second largest city, is particularly interested in this baby work. The commissioner of health, Doctor Bundesen, has just published a 68-page book for mothers and has distributed 300,000 copies to the mothers of Chicago.

To repeat all the good advice to mothers in these 68 pages is impossible. But the ten commandments for mothers ought to be read and followed by mothers everywhere. They are:

1. Thou shalt not deprive thy baby of breast milk unless it is absolutely necessary.
2. Thou shalt not give thy baby soothing syrups or sleeping powders.
3. Thou shalt not take the advice of friends or neighbors in feeding thy baby, as no two need the same food.
4. Thou shalt not allow thy baby to sleep in the same bed with anyone else.
5. Thou shalt not be afraid of fresh air.
6. Thou shalt not treat thy baby as a plaything nor show him off to friends or relatives or neighbors.
7. Thou shalt not kiss thy baby on the mouth nor allow anyone else to do so.
8. Thou shalt not scold or grumble, especially before meals.
9. Thou shalt not spoil thy baby by humoring him.
10. Thou shalt not expose thy baby to colds or to any other contagious disease.

KEEPING OUT MOTHS

MOTHS are the housewife's deadly enemies. They are of no possible use. They are persistent and destructive pests. They delight to get into closets, bureau drawers, trunks and to eat holes in any woolen fabrics they can get at. They seem to have an infallible and diabolical ability to pick the best and the most valuable material.

The average housewife is a firm believer in the value of a cedar chest or wardrobe in protecting clothes from moths. Like many other popular beliefs, this is based largely on tradition handed down from one generation to another.

But now comes the cold and unbiased scientific mind to whom nothing is sacred until it is proven. The United States Department of Agriculture has turned two of its experts loose on the moth problem, and well they may, for moths, taken the country over, destroy enough fabrics to amount to millions of dollars loss every year.

After exhaustive experiments lasting over a year Frank Rabok and E. A. Back, expert entomologists in the Department of Agriculture, report that cedar chests are not an absolute protection against moths.

Chests made of red cedar, they say, if in good condition and tight, will protect clothes from moths provided—and here's the rub—clothes are thoroughly beaten, brushed, shaken and sunned before being put in the chest. That is, if there are no moths or moth eggs in the clothes before they are put away. The chest will not kill them or keep them from growing. If tightly made and kept shut, it will keep any new moths from getting in from outside after the clothes are put away.

The chest should remain tightly closed, they say, except when clothing is being taken out or put in. This should be done as rapidly as possible, so as to prevent any outside moth from getting in and laying eggs in the clothes.

A cedar chest has always been supposed to be especially effective in keeping out moths on account of the peculiar odor of the cedar wood. But any kind of a chest is equally good, provided it is made with tightly fitting joints and cover and provided the clothes are thoroughly brushed, cleaned and sunned before putting them in.

Finally, to be on the safe side, put one or two pounds of naphthalene in the chest before closing it.

"Now I Am Well and the Mother of Two Children"

Just Another Story About the Goodness of PE-RU-NA

Mrs. Anna Linder, R. F. D. No. 1, Box 44, Dassel, Meeker County, Minn., writes: "For two years I suffered with that terrible disease, chronic catarrh. Fortunately I saw your advertisement and took Pe-ru-na. Now I am well and the mother of two children. I owe it all to Pe-ru-na. I would not be without that great remedy for twice its cost, for I am well and strong now. I cannot speak in too high terms of its value as a medicine."

For more than half a century Dr. Hartman's Pe-ru-na has been performing just such wonderwork as this.

Pe-ru-na is sold everywhere in both tablet and liquid form. Insist upon having genuine Pe-ru-na.

Is Your Work Hard?

Is your work wearing you out? Are you tortured with throbbing backache—feel tired, weak and worn out? Then look to your kidneys! Many occupations tend to weaken the kidneys. Constant backache, headaches, dizziness and rheumatic pains result. One suffers annoying kidney irregularities, feels nervous, irritable and worn out. Don't wait! Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Workers everywhere recommend Doan's. They should help you, too. Ask your neighbor!

An Illinois Case

Alvin MARS, 1412 S. Water St., Shelbyville, Ill., says: "Cold frequently settled on my kidneys and caused them to act irregularly. The secretions contained sediment and scalded in passage. My back was weak and when I stooped, sharp pains took me through the small of it. I began using Doan's Pills and the first box I used rid me of the trouble."

OAK LAWN STANDARD SCHOOL Dist. 122. Wiley Simmons, Prin.

Our 2nd ball season ended Thursday and Clarence Woodrich's team won the season, having won three weeks out of the four which constituted the season. We shall now re-organize for a 3rd season.

Miss McClaughry visited us again on the 20th and set the 24th as our date for our entertainment.

Our school dismissed Thursday and Friday for Thanksgiving.

The evening of Nov. 24th was a pleasant one to those who gathered at our school. A combination program was given. The achievement club held its regular meeting, after which a Thanksgiving cantata was presented by the pupils of Mrs. Simmons. Immediately following the cantata, an Armistice number was presented by the pupils of Mr. Simmons. Miss McClaughry was present and gave a splendid address which was enjoyed by all. She also brought Mrs. Bowen from Chicago, who sang four beautiful selections. After the program was over, the people were not in a hurry to get away, but went into the primary room to visit with each other and view the interesting exhibit of project work, such as sewing, wood-work, vegetables, posters etc., which had been done by the pupils. Everyone seemed to enjoy the exercises and exhibit and our pledge is, that the next one will be better than ever. Mr. Simmons and the boys made a new stage for the school which the School Board very kindly agreed to pay for the material. The proceeds of the entertainment amounted to $35.25 and will be used as a library fund for the school.

Mrs. Simmons has re-organized the sewing class for the girls and they are starting their work. Our girls have unusual talent for this work and we must help them use it. The boys, with Mr. Simmons, are completing their work-shop in the basement and we must say, that it is an interesting little room, also that there is going to be some interesting work done there. A few small pieces have been completed already and the boys are deeply interested. In time, the work will speak for itself. Wait until you see some of it.

TINLEY PARK

The Grim Reaper invaded and broke up a home of loving young parents and left two small children when death claimed the wife and mother, Mrs. Wm. Rick of Tinley Park last Sunday morning.

About three weeks ago Mrs. Rick was stricken with scarlet fever and in spite of all that three skilled doctors and two nurses could do, the hand of death was not stayed and the end came about 11 o'clock Sunday morning, Mrs. Rick being conscious to the end and fully resigned to meet her Creator. The sympathy of the community goes out to the deeply bereaved husband and father and to the parents of the departed.

Private funeral services were held Monday afternoon at the Tinley Park cemetery. Memorial services will be held this coming Sunday afternoon at two o'clock at the Zion Lutheran church, Rev. A. Buddenhagen officiating.

Mrs. Rick nee Marie Bruennig, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Bruennig was born December 16, 1902 in Tinley Park. She was confirmed, March 24, 1918. She was united in marriage with Wm. Rick in 1922. To this union two children, a son and a daughter were born, who with the husband and parents survive. She attained the age of 22 years, 11 months and 12 days.

John Hamilton, aged 84 years, a former resident of Bremen township died at his home in Blue Island Monday. He was buried in the Smith cemetery Wednesday.

Mrs. Gertude Saul, mother of Mrs. Henry C. Vogt, died Monday morning at her home in Chicago, aged 63 years. Funeral services were held in Chicago Thursday with burial in the Tinley Park cemetery, Rev. A. Buddenhagen of the local Zion Lutheran church officiating.

The George Henke farm of 50 acres at Coopers Grove was sold last Saturday to a Chicago real estate firm for $550 per acre cash.

Wm. Kimmel, well known old resident of Tinley Park is critically ill.

The meetings of the Ladies Aid and the Luther League of the Zion Lutheran church which were to have been held this week have been postponed until next week.

The Woods Orchestra of Chicago will give a confetti dance at the Saenger Hall, Saturday night, December 19.

Miss Selma Brueggemann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Brueggemann of Tinley Park, graduated from the Chicago Conservatory of Music last Saturday night. Miss Brueggemann is an accomplished musician and will take up the teaching of music. In fact she has been instructing a class in music for sometime.

H. F. Brueggemann and John C. Andres, the latter the cashier of the Bremen State Bank inspected the new burglar proof fixtures of the Mokena State Bank Tuesday.

FRANKFORT

Miss Elsie Bauch, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jake Bauch, who is taking a nurse training course at Silver Cross hospital, underwent an operation last Saturday.

Harold Cheney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cheney, is back to school after a sick spell.

NEARLY INSANE AT TIMES

Mrs. Saunders Tells how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieved Troubles of Change of Life

Knoxville, Tenn.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound while going through the Change of Life. I was very nervous, could not sleep and had melancholy spells. In fact, I was nearly insane at times and my memory was almost a blank. I was so weak I could not do my housework half of the time and suffered dreadfully with my back. My doctor said I would have to worry it out and I went through this for three years before I began taking the Vegetable Compound which I saw advertised. I think it was eight bottles that I took. It has been two years since I took any and I haven't had a doctor since for that trouble. I do all my washing and ironing and I have gained from 116 to 138 pounds. I feel so well I think I do not need any medicine now, but I advise all women who suffer physically and mentally as I did to give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. I hope it will do as much for them as it did for me."—Mrs. T. A. SAUNDERS, 711 E. Depot Street, Knoxville, Tenn.

"My brain has gone round and round like a whirlpool for months! I don't know what I think."

"Well, think this," he said gently: "Marriage laws and forms vary with every creed, and in every country, to suit temperament or environment. And everywhere, certain conventions are necessary. For God's sake, don't imagine I'm an advocate of loose morality! But you and I are cast off from all rules save those of our own making. Have you considered that? These natives—Indians, Turks, Christians—all have some ideal which they embody in certain marriage rites and laws."

She hung upon his words, clasping tightly the hands holding her own. "Yes?" she breathed, when he paused.

"Well—we are adrift from every one which applies to us. We can't obey them in the letter. We only have them in our hearts."

"You mean," she whispered, "you think it would be right to form our own—marriage rites?"

"I do. Before God Barbara, I do. To me, our wedding would be as sacred and lawful here, with the sea for music, the birds for witness, as in a crowded church. I want you always to remember that."

The waves echoed faintly upon the shore; the wind stirred the palm leaves in their enclosure; otherwise the whole world seemed waiting, in a stillness like death, for her reply.

"I believe you, Alan," she murmured at last. "I had not thought of it at all in this light. It would be the same to me, in my heart. But—should we be right? Suppose—afterward—we were rescued?"

"Well? Then we should at once obey the letter. Here we can obey the spirit. But isn't that the greater? In the world it is the reverse, often. The spirit is violated."

"Suppose," she began again, with a shudder, "only one of us were rescued?"

"Don't conjure up imaginary horrors." She drew away, looking around the bay with the same pathetic helplessness that had struck him so poignantly on Christmas eve.

"Oh!" she muttered, "it is a terrible problem! If only there were somebody outside it all, to help! I am so afraid our very love may guide us—wrongly."

"No," he said quickly. "It won't, because it is love—not that other word beginning with the same letter. Besides, it is the motive of the heart which counts, in all problems."

She turned away, covering her face with her hands.

"What can we do? What can we do?" The words came brokenly, pathetically, to the other outcast from all laws. He was conscious tonight, more than ever before, of their growing, dominant need of each other. Had he striven in his old arrogance she would not, he knew, have resisted his appeal. But the great keynote was tuning his nature as well as hers. All the chivalry latent in his being rose to his heart, casting out passion. With infinite delicacy he went to her and put his arms about her.

"We are down among the deep chords together, now," he whispered. "But together—always together."

With a choking cry she turned and flung herself upon his breast, clinging to him, the only bulwark of her life.

"I can't decide yet. Oh! I can't decide; I can't decide—" And she burst into a passion of tears.

III

The man, with the divine instinct of understanding now awakened, realized acutely all that the girl was suffering. He held her quivering form close, saying nothing. There was nothing he could say. Her own soul must now fight out this battle between the old instincts of a lifetime and those of a world beyond reach of civilized rule.

Presently, when she grew calmer, he lifted her bodily and carried her into the hut. He placed her upon her bed; then knelt for a moment, and laid his cheek to hers.

"The decision lies in your hands," he whispered. "Come and tell me when you know."

Then he rose to his feet, lingering beside her for a time, a world of almost maternal tenderness in his steady regard. But she made no reply. With a little gesture of helplessness, he turned, and walked back to the lagoon.

Croft, in old days, could not have been called a strongly sexed man. All the vitality of his nature went into other channels. Now, when, for the first time, passion had come to him, it found him bereft of all those other outlets to his abundant energy. It shook him with fierce intensity. In the past, his whole concentration, every ounce of brain and strength, had been given to his work and inventions. Now the same splendid force, welling up and overflowing, was concentrated upon woman—a channel half closed against him. Being half closed caused more torture than if it had been entirely shut and barred.

Fate—God—whatever the Unseen Power was called—had hurled them, man and woman, together in this isolation. Why, by all that was sacred, should they resist the law underlying His creation? Must His primal laws be set aside because those made by man, now mere chimeras, were absent? It was absurd, quixotic, unnecessary.

But beneath the velvet glove of nature lies the iron hand; behind her smiling face sits grim severity. These, more than any scruples, caused him to pause. He who had ever scorned obstacles, now faced them appalled. He who had never known fear, was now afraid.

He who had ever seized what he desired, now stood aside and waited.

Barbara must decide. To that, amid the turmoil of his spirit, he clung. There must never be coercion; she was no weakling. Not until she saw the path clear before her would she move an inch: that he knew well.

No sign came from the hut. Within its darkness, inert heat buried in her outstretched arms, lay the arbiter of his fate and her own. In a great and awful loneliness of soul, such as she had never imagined possible, she faced the greatest question woman can be called upon to answer. The mountains were quite close now; but she approached them without shrinking, only desirous of finding the right path across to her Beloved. She did not blind herself. She had contemplated marriage before, aware of all it meant to a woman in civilization. Now she contemplated it shorn of all but nature's own sublimely terrible forces; contemplated the years ahead, with the possibility of other lives besides their own. . . . Reverberations! Truly, when one irrevocable chord is struck, the reverberations roll on and on, echoing all around, so that God's whole Harmony may be marred or perfected. Can one always tell which it will be?

knowing no other. . . . The conventions of previous years seemed very remote now, very unreal. . . . His point of view was, surely, mere common sense. . . . As the day wore on, she felt more and more silent, a terrible aching hunger in her heart. . . . Must their two natures age here in barren purposelessness? Never be fulfilled? Why? Because far-off rules of society, which could not reach them, would be broken? How trivial such things seemed here, where the world was still in its beginning. . . .

In the evening, the tiny girl, tired after excitement of the day, grew sleepy and fretful. Alan stopped an uproarious game, sat down upon a rock, and lifted her in his arms. She lay there contentedly, her little black head nestled in his shoulder.

A pain that, in its poignancy, was almost physical, gripped Barbara's heart. Great tears welled up suddenly and ran down her cheeks. Moved by an irresistible impulse she darted forward and snatched the child from him. "No, no, no! I can't bear—that! Let them go home. . . . It is time they went home. . . ."

For a moment he gazed at her, bereft of speech. Then he rose, and called Laalo.

"I will take them home," he said quietly.

When he returned, she had sunk upon the rock he had vacated. With eyes tragic in their intentness, she watched him approach. He came close to her. With one of his old swift movements he raised her chin with his hand, so that she met the penetration of his gaze.

"Barbara!" he muttered, "this will drive us mad. We are human, not gods."

She drew away, hiding her face in her hands. The very touch of his fingers sent an electric current racing through her veins. To continue like this was becoming daily more impossible.

Presently she rose, not daring to speak, and turned from him into the hut.

Blindly, bewildered, Barbara groped her way, step by step, through a maze of uncertainty. The day with the native children had been a revelation. Never before had she realized the passion of longing which possessed her. . . . And by her own self-revelation she judged the suffering of the man waiting for her decision. The claims of another's need grew insistent, dominating. . . . More and more did the life of previous years seem pale and unreal. . . . The fears for the future, the burden of its responsibilities, grew fainter, assumed new aspects. . . .

There came a night when Alan, after being away all day returned moody, irritable, impatient of all the trivial subjects with which she endeavored to make conversation.

"Have you been working in the plantation?" she asked, after several unsuccessful attempts during supper.

"No."

He ate a banana, and threw away the skin. "What's the good of it all?" he asked impatiently. "It will lead nowhere."

"It's occupation," she faltered.

"Occupation? Yes. Occupation for the sake of occupation! Is that all life is to be worth? My G—d! What an outlook!"

This was another of Barbara's fears. How long would the limited interests of the island, shorn of a deeper outlet, suffice for a man of his temperament?

"You are doing a lot of good among the natives," she suggested, feeble though she knew the remark to be.

"Good?" He gave an impatient laugh. "Lord! Don't credit me with the instincts of a missionary! That's only 'occupation.' One hour, if we left this place, and they would forget it all."

This bitterness, this dreary desolation of voice and mien, so unlike the old Alan of indomitable resource and optimism, cut Barbara to the heart. For she understood.

"Alan! Alan!" she cried, stretching out a hand.

But he shook his head. "No. I can't—I—daren't. I'm only fit for the devil tonight."

She rose, her lips trembling, and went toward him.

"Don't! Alan, don't shut me out! I—understand—"

"Understand? You can't, or—" Suddenly he seized her, almost viciously, dragging her up against him. With shaking hands he pressed back her head, and laid his hot lips upon her neck.

"I'll—force you to give in—one day—" he muttered thickly.

She did not struggle; but she trembled violently in his grasp. For a long moment his eyes burned into hers. But, among the answering passion they saw there, lay the purity which was the very essence of her being. . . .

As abruptly as he has seized her, he let her go again.

"I told you I was only fit for the devil tonight," he said huskily. "Let me be. . . . for God's sake, let me be. . . ."

She turned, quivering in every limb, and ran into the hut.

For hours she lay, deaf and blind to all around, alone with her God. . . .

And gradually a great peace stole over her spirit. Imperceptibly, the last mountain rolled slowly away. As one tired out after long, victorious warfare, she lay, motionless, the moonlight falling through the little window upon her white-robed figure. . . .

After a time she rose and looked once more upon the waves she loved so well, a wondrous shining in her eyes. And all the perfumed beauty of the night blended in the tender, passionate craving to be with him who, also, had striven, and suffered, and conquered.

Slipping on her old Japanese wrapper, she passed noiselessly out of her room. He had, she knew, not gone in to bed.

Moved by some instinct, she turned, stumbling over the rough ground, and ascended the eastern slopes, where they had watched the dawn on that Christmas day nearly a year ago.

IV

A group of rough bowlders, moss-covered, commanded a long view over the eastern shore of the island, while forming a shelter from the wind. The girl approached them; then, at a sudden soft sound, stood still, her heart beating rapidly. Noiselessly rounding them, she discovered the man she sought stretched upon the ground, his head thrown back upon clasped arms, his eyes dreaming far away over the softly outlined scene below.

For a moment she fingered the folds of her thin garment, watching him. Then the wind fluttered one of her loose sleeves; and his gaze flashed back from far distances. Turning his head, he saw the figure standing, motionless, by his side.

She stood perfectly still, her hands pressed upon the garment at her breast, the wind waving her cloudy hair, her lips a little parted, her blue eyes darkly shining in the faint light.

Once—twice—she tried to speak, but the words would not come: she could only envelop him, as it were, in the radiant glory of her face. . . .

Suddenly a great wave of understanding broke over him, rendering him for a moment breathless, blinded, bewildered. . . . Then, instinctively, he raised his arms. With a little inarticulate cry the girl allowed him to take her, trembling in her capitulation, clinging to him, submitting, without resistance, to the storm of passion at last set free. His kisses burned into her soft flesh, his arms crushed her well-nigh breathless; she was carried away by the tide of his ardor, responsive, gloriating. . . .

Barbara had crossed her Rubicon for all time.

Presently he sat down upon the rocks, still holding her to him.

"You—came to tell me?" he whispered, his face close to hers, his eyes piercing to her very soul.

"Yes," she whispered back. . . .

After a time she raised herself, still in his arms.

"Alan, I—couldn't tell you before; until I felt convinced that all—was right. You understand; don't you? It was because I loved you so, dear heart, not—fear, or coldness—"

"I understand," he murmured, laying his cheek against hers. "I always understood. It was the beastly brute in me that sometimes seemed not to. . . . When, Barbara?"

Her head fell back upon his breast; with a little throbbing sigh, she re-nounced her will to him.

"Whenever—you like, Alan."

"At dawn?" he whispered. "It will soon be here. When the sun rises over the water it shall witness our—marriage rites?"

The passion had died out of his voice, and a note almost of awe had crept in.

They remained, sometimes silent, sometimes discussing, in low tones, their forthcoming bridal, while the moonlight waned, and the wonderful blue-black of the southern night softened and paled.

Presently Alan lowered the hand he held near his cheek and opened his fingers.

"What can we do about a wedding ring?" he asked.

"Oh! Does that matter?"

"I should like to see you wearing one—of mine. Wait!" he continued, searching in the pockets of his frayed breeches. He displayed a collection of keys, a pocket knife, and a pencil, suspended upon a small tin key ring.

"Will this fit? It's better than nothing."

"It looks about the right size, and will do beautifully. Oh, Alan! how I shall love it!"

He smiled, a world of tenderness in his eyes. "Look," he said. "Dawn is breaking."

Early birds began to chirp and whistle, away in the forest; the dancing waves turned a steely gray. The wind had dropped, leaving a great silence. It seemed as if nature were holding her breath, waiting for the dawn not far off. . . . When at last the sun's first long shaft of gold quivered across the water, the man rose and set the girl gently upon her feet. The hand in his trembled a little; but she met his eyes bravely, smilingly. . . .

Women and Courtship

Man views it as a great testimony to his prowess at amour to yield up his liberty, his property and his soul to the first woman who, in despair of finding better game, turns her appraising eye upon him. But if you want to hear a mirthless laugh, just present this masculine theory to a bridesmaid at a wedding, particularly after alcohol and crocodile tears have done their disarming work upon her. That is to say, just hint to her that the bride harbored no notion of marriage until stormed into acquiescence by the moonstruck and impetuous bridegroom.—H. L. Mencken, in "In Defense of Women."

"But constipation is serious, Grace"

"Not so long ago I was like you—headaches a good deal of the time, sleeping badly, and the least bit of housework tired me out. My complexion too, was bad."

"Finally, I went to see Dr. Farman. He showed me that it was constipation that was back of my troubles. He said that it was a very serious thing because poisons from clogged waste matter were picked up by the blood and carried to every body organ. And if I didn't correct it in time I might become a victim of one of those terrible organic diseases."

"He made me drop laxatives altogether, changed my diet, and put me on Nujol. I don't think I've ever felt better."

I sleep well, my headaches have disappeared, and you can see for yourself what an improvement there is in my skin. Nujol has done wonders for me."

Nujol Works Like Nature

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It is neither a food nor a medicine. It does not gripe. It is gentle and natural in its action and is prescribed by leading medical authorities.

Nujol simply makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly, in accordance with the directions on each bottle. As Nujol is not a laxative, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today and begin the perfect health that is possible only when intestinal elimination is normal and regular.

How often have you longed for some relief as you suffered torture from swollen, inflamed muscles and joints—how often have you said you would give anything in the World for a few hours comfort!

But you didn't know that all you had to do to get real relief from this nerve wracking misery was just to build rich, red blood, did you? You didn't know that rheumatism had to be stopped from the inside by destroying the impurities that cause it—by building millions of red cells in your poor, weak blood, did you?

Until you fill your system full of healthy, rich, red blood you will never end your rheumatism. S. S. S. will surely help you. That's because S. S. S.

helps Nature build the red-blood-cells that fight off the impurities that cause rheumatism.

Conquer rheumatism! S. S. S. has shown the way. For generations S. S. S. has brought blessed relief and comfort to thousands of rheumatic sufferers.

When the rich, red blood that S. S. S. helps Nature build goes coursing through your system, it purifies the blood in your body. Rheumatism vanishes—skin blemishes disappear—you begin to get hungry again and enjoy your food—strength and power fill your body—you are vigorous—red-blooded and ready for action. Know this joy of living again! Take S. S. S. and banish rheumatism!

Christmas Morning

By EUGENE FIELD

THE angel host that sped last night,
Bearing the wondrous news afar,
Came in their ever-glorious flight
Unto a slumbering little star.

"Awake and sing, O star!" they cried.
"Awake and glorify the morn.
Herald the tidings far and wide—
He that shall lead His flock is born!"

The little star awoke and sung
As only stars in rapture may,
And presently where church bells hung
The joyous tidings found their way.

"Awake, O bells! 'tis Christmas morn—
Awake and let thy music tell
To all mankind that now is born
What Shepherd loves His lambskins well!"

Then rang the bells as fled the night
O'er dreaming land and drowsing deep,
And coming with the morning light,
They called, my child, to you asleep.

Sweetly and tenderly they spoke,
And lingering round your little bed,
Their music pleaded till you woke,
And this was 'tis their music said:

"Awake and sing! 'tis Christmas morn,
Whereon all earth salutes her King!
In Bethlehem is the Shepherd born,
Awake, O little lamb and sing!"

So, dear, my child, kneel at my feet,
And with those voices from above
Share thou this holy time with me,
The universal hymn of love.

Brice's Christmas at Old Farm Home

Jolly Girl Gives Uncle and Aunt and Young Friends Happy Surprise.

By FRANK HERBERT SWEET

BRICE HARPER stepped happily from the train. A whole month vacation, with Christmas only ten days away. That meant nearly three weeks for after-Christmas jollification, skating, visiting around, and curled up before the big fireplace popping corn and reading and talking—just playing lady. After three steady, grinding years in the department store it would be heavenly. Wouldn't Aunt Margaret and Uncle Jack be surprised and pleased! It was to be a surprise. She had not written them.

She flashed a look down the platform. Yes, there was wooden-legged Sam, the expressman, peering into the baggage room for possible business.

"Hoo-hoo!" she challenged.

The old expressman looked up, stared, then stumped forward.

"Brice Harper, for a fact!" he cried. "Back home ag'in. Come to stay, or a visitin'?"

"Just visiting, Uncle Sam. A whole month, though. After three years. I'd never have believed I could stay away that long. I want you to take my trunk right out, and I'll ride with you."

"Ain't ye heered—had a letter nor aothin'?" asked the old man, whose face had been growing troubled.

"N-no. Anything the matter?" with sudden anxiety.

"No, except they ain't there. Folks round here know all other folks do, ye recollect. So I did hear your Aunt Margaret Holmes said Christmas was so lonesome here she wouldn't spend another like the last. Two, three days ago she an' your Uncle Jack went over into the next county to spend Christmas with a cousin who has a reg'lar passel o' children. I was by there yesterday, an' the house did look dismal, all shet up, with hens an' turkeys complainin' all over the place."

"Isn't there anyone to look after them?"

"One o' the Dill boys was asked to, I believe, but he's neglectin' 'em shameful. He—"

A shrill hail came from a store across from the station.

"Say, Brice," wheedled the old expressman, "would ye mind waitin' three or four seconds? That mad shouter was storekeeper Tomson. Been 'spectin' a box o' Christmas stuff more'n a week, an' 't was just throwed off this train. He was yellin' to me. S'pose I take the box over to him, then come an' carry you and the trunk out to one o' your girl friends? They'll all be glad to have ye visit 'em."

But Brice had been thinking rapidly.

"Take the box over, Uncle Sam," she said.

"Take the box over, Uncle Sam," she said, "and I'll run across to the post office while you're gone. I want to write some postals. And no, I won't embarrass any of my girl friends. You may carry my trunk right out to the farmhouse. I know where Aunt Margaret hides the key. And I know she and Uncle Jack would want me to go right there and use everything as my own. I'll take care of the poultry," enthusiastically, "and I'll bake one of the turkeys for Christmas, and cook everything that goes with it, pies and cakes and all. Won't it be fun!"

"You can invite a lot of your girl friends to eat with you, too," grinned the expressman.

"Afterward," agreed Brice. "They will all want to eat at home on Christmas. Then we'll have a round of nice visiting. But for the real Christmas I'm going to depend on the postals. There are lots of nice girls in the department store who haven't any home, and who will have to depend on the cheap boarding houses they live at. I'll write a postal to Aunt Margaret, and five or six to girls I know will be glad to spend their week or ten days vacation with me. And say, Uncle Sam, I'll look around the house, and then make a list of groceries and other things I want you to bring out, and—any place where I can buy a Christmas tree?"

"Ain't none better than grow right down on your uncle's lower shed mender."

"All right. I'll get the Dill boy to help, and we'll cut and rig up a nice one—Or no, I'll wait a few days until some of the store girls come. If they feel like me—and I know they will—they'll want to help get the tree, and trim it, and to help cook the dinner."

"Need any Christmas present stuff?" chuckled old Sam. "Tomson's been sayin' he was havin' the grandest holiday goods ever opened up here, comin' in that box. Mebbe ye'd like to see him pry the cover off."

"Deed I would," promptly. "I'll be right over from the post office."

The girls condemned to a prospective boarding house Christmas accepted Brice's invitation relievedly. On the third day old Sam brought the hilarious five out in his ancient express wagon. In the three days Brice and the Dill boy had been making the house ready for them and looking over the root and apple cellar and preserve closet with an eye to Christmas.

"Greens Were Found at the Edge of the Swamp."

Then the girls piled in like a whole jolly Christmas in itself, and the old farmhouse seemed like to burst itself.

The Christmas tree was cut and drawn home with all the appropriate songs and carols and huzzas they could think of, and trimmed as never a Christmas tree had been trimmed before.

Greens found among the leaves at the edge of the swamp, a small holly discovered, and a sprig of mistletoe bought at some store. The kitchen became filled with fragrance and song, the evening crackled with popping corn, rang with voices al out the awakened organ, and the fireplace glowed with the logs behind and the half circle of baking apples in front.

And then right in the midst of it the hearty voice of Uncle Jack roared through the door, mellowed by the softer, happy laugh of Aunt Margaret that accompanied it.

"I'm going to have that dinky post office over yonder indicted," guffawed Uncle Jack. "Kept that postal four days before the R. F. D. delivered it. Fifteen minutes after that we were on our way. Of course we had to come. Five more girls to help wake the old house up. Whoopee! Why didn't you write so we needn't have left the lonesome place?"

"Why didn't you write you were going away, so I'd have known what to expect?" retorted Brice.

"Lucky none of us didn't," laughed Aunt Margaret, "for then we might not have these nice five extra girls. But come, I must get into the kitchen."

"But we've cooked and cooked and cooked, till—"

"Not enough," declared Aunt Margaret firmly, "no matter how much you've done. There are all your old friends that must be invited to come, though they would, anyway. And we want your friends here to meet 'em. Then we must invite a lot of extra young people in evenings to help keep things going. Then—my land! if I hadn't forgotten! There's a wagon load outside. Where's Jack? Oh, I guess he's gone out to look after 'em. You see, Cousin Mary didn't want us to leave, being nice Christmas. So we brought 'em all along. Not any danger of havin' too much to eat. Then there ain't too much Christmas goods over in the next county, so Jack's goin' into town this evenin' to buy more."

"But, Aunt Margaret, we've got a tree ram-jammed full," explained Brice.

"Not enough," firmly. "We can pack more on the floor under it. Now I'm goin' into the kitchen. Can't you see, girls," her firm voice suddenly dropping pathetically, "being Christmas I've just got to cook something."

MARLEY

There was no moving picture shown at the Marley church last Friday night, owing to the failure of the films to arrive that day. It is with regret that the public had to meet with this disappointment. Miss Evelyn Marshall entertained a number of young people at her home Sunday in honor of Miss Mildred Currie of Shelbyville, Mich who is a guest at the Marshall home. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Storm entertained at Thanksgiving dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Marshall and the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland of Warren, Minn., attended a social function at the palatial Porter home in Joliet last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Marshall accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland of Warren, Minn., were Chicago visitors Sunday.
